

Premedical Advisory Committee

The Premedical Advisory Committee Letter of Recommendation is written for current students and alumni who seek application to clinical graduate programs (medical, dental, physician assistant, pharmacy, physical therapy, etc.). Admissions Committees for professional graduate programs strongly advise that recommendation letters come from the institution's advisory committee if available.

The Committee will conduct a personal interview with the student in the spring semester of the year the student intends to apply for admission (typically summer to fall for matriculation the following calendar year). Committee letters are submitted to graduate schools or application services during the summer semester following the interview.

The Premedical Advisory Committee comprises a variety of science faculty, some who may not have previously associated with the student. The student should prepare a one-page resume or curriculum vitae to share with members of the committee. The evaluation will consider both the student's interview performance as well as experience from the experiences Committee faculty have had with the student.
